(Glass ceiling is defined as: a barrier to career advancement: an unofficial but real impediment to somebody's advancement into upper-level management positions because of discrimination based on the person's gender, age, race, ethnicity, or sexual preference.)

I have been denied a promotion or educational opportunity at UNM because of:

- My sex.
- My age.

- A pregnancy.

I have been advised by a supervisor/professor/advisor that my career/academic career would suffer if I became pregnant, was pregnant, or was thinking of becoming pregnant.

A female faculty/staff/student in my department would be overlooked for a promotion or opportunity if she announced a pregnancy.

Advisors, professors, and supervisors at UNM are supportive of women continuing their education or career when they become pregnant.

There are not enough female staff and faculty role models at UNM.

This University promotes women and men staff and faculty at similar rates.

Women and men in similar positions at this University advance at the same rate.

Compared to female staff/faculty, male staff/faculty are given more opportunities for promotions and career advancement.

This University has made a sincere effort in recent years to improve the number of women staff/faculty at all levels.

The culture/climate of this University keeps women from reaching higher-level positions.

The culture/climate at this University prevents women from reaching their full potential.

There are as many women in leadership positions on this campus as there are men in such positions.

I receive less pay than my colleagues because of my sex.

Female staff are expected to be more productive than their male colleagues in the same positions.

Female faculty have the same requirements for tenure as their male counterparts.

Female students are judged by the same standards as their male classmates.
