

BLM: The Staining Acronym - Alexandria Evans (Lexii Moreina)

Black Lives Matter is what I whisper to myself in the morning.

To remind myself that I am still here and that it must mean, I'm here for a reason.
A weighted affirmation that people can't even agree on
And when I say people... I mean people who don't claim to be like me.
It's funny because the word "matters" by definition means:

an affair or situation under consideration

And to think there's millions of people in this world who don't "consider" me and my life situations IMPORTANT.

- that is quite a heavy cross to bear

Then why work or educate myself.

why have children or even want more for yourself.

-HELL-

why should I pay taxes? be active in my community? and be a law abiding PROUD American...

If when my grandma asked for civil rights not even EQUAL and she was almost lynched.

and here I am NOW just asking if my black ass matters.

If you cut me open, I bleed.

Connective tissues, nerves, and bone held together by the same science as everyone I know.

So why don't I matter...

? (question mark)

It is so sad how America is so combative.

All lives matter is not a clever comeback.

It is merely a cop out.

A desensitized, maniacal, and ill willed a-testament to the truth

That my life can't matter in America

Cus that means I am human too.

-Alexandria Evans (Lexii Moreina)